The Honorable Josh Shapiro
Attorney General of Pennsylvania
Pennsylvania Office of Attorney General
16th Floor, Strawberry Square
Harrisburg, PA 17120

Dear Mr. Shapiro,

We, representing communities across the nation being victimized by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission’s (FERC) misuse of power in its approval of interstate transmission pipeline projects, are turning to you for both strength and leadership. We write to urge you to use the full weight of your offices to speak up on behalf of New York State, and all states across the nation, to defend the right of states to review and approve, or reject (in whole or in part), interstate natural gas transmission pipelines.

FERC has recently declared New York’s rejection of a Clean Water Act 401 Certification for a pipeline project null and void. Despite that determination being disputed by New York in court, FERC has gone ahead and granted the pipeline company authorization to begin construction – thereby seeking to ensure that even a positive outcome in favor of the state of New York will be rendered meaningless as the project will likely be fully or significantly constructed by the time such a determination is made.

FERC’s actions in this case are an unprecedented usurpation of a federal authority specifically delegated to states in order to protect natural resources. In this case FERC’s overreach not only usurped New York State’s right and responsibility to protect water quality, but also the process necessary to ensure that protection.

Regardless of your state’s position regarding fracking operations and its infrastructure, this is an issue of states’ rights. We hope you will join with New York in defending them. That defense would ideally take the form of an amicus brief or some other formal stance on the matter.

The Clean Water Act and the Natural Gas Act specifically protect the rights of states to review and approve, disapprove, or approve with modifications, interstate natural gas pipeline projects that could harm the water resources of a state.

Section 401 Clean Water Act (CWA) states: “no [federal] license or permit shall be granted until the certification required by this section has been granted or waived.” 33 U.S.C. § 1341(a)(1). Several courts, including the Supreme Court, have supported this authority, stating:
“without [Section 401] certification, FERC lacks authority to issue a license.”\(^1\) and Section 401 “requires States to provide a water quality certification before a federal license or permit can be issued...”\(^2\)

In addition, recognizing the important balance of power between the states, this legal authority preserved by the terms of the Clean Water Act is specifically referenced and preserved in the federal Natural Gas Act.

As it is entitled to do by these laws, on August 30, 2017, the State of New York denied a Section 401 Certification for the Millennium Pipeline Company's Valley Lateral Project. This denial was issued within the mandatory one-year time from the date that New York determined Millennium's 401 Certification application to be complete, which occurred on August 31, 2016. Millennium argues that New York State was required to act within one year from the time the company submitted its permit application on November 23, 2015, despite the fact that New York had issued several notices that the company's application was incomplete and identified additional information that was required for agency decisionmaking.

True to form, FERC sided with the pipeline company and unilaterally determined that New York state, despite its ongoing vigilance with regards to the project, had waived its 401 Certification authority and therefore Millennium was no longer bound to secure it – in other words, New York State’s denial of the 401 Certification was, according to FERC, meaningless as the state no longer had this power.

New York rightfully challenged, in court, this action by FERC to strip from the state its legal authority to protect its water resources using section 401 of the federal Clean Water Act.

Undeterred by the state’s legal opposition to FERC’s illegal act, on October 27, 2017 a member of FERC’s staff issued a notice for the Valley Lateral Project to proceed with construction. Millennium workers were soon after seen on the site preparing for construction activity.

New York state was forced to expend additional state resources to file with the Second Circuit for an emergency stay of the “Notice to Proceed with Construction” issued by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission on October 27, 2017. Thankfully, on November 2, the court granted the stay, at least temporarily, until the court is able to consider the merits of New York’s filing for a Writ of Prohibition.

Across the nation, FERC is abusing its power. It is stripping states of their legal authority, it is undermining the rights of people to protect their property from the misuse of eminent domain authority, and it is flagrantly ignoring legal obligations to protect the environment and community rights.

In this situation, FERC is once again overstepping the bounds of the law by seeking to strip a state of its legal authority to protect its natural resources from harm by pipeline infrastructure.

We urge you to take strong and swift action to defend the rights of New York state, and all states, under section 401 of the Clean Water Act by taking a strong and formal stance against FERC’s actions to both declare New York’s authority waived and by issuing the Notice to Proceed while this matter is being handled in the courts.

\(^1\) City of Tacoma v. FERC, 460 F.3d 53, 68 (D.C. Cir. 2006)
We also urge you to take this moment to call for congressional hearings into FERC’s many abuses of its power and our laws – without in depth investigation, including testimony from communities across the nation that have suffered at the hands of FERC, these kinds of abuses will continue and grow.

The stakes for our environment, for public health, and for states’ legal authority could not be higher. Our responsibility could not be weightier. We urge you to act now; to act decisively; to act with commitment to the interests of your state and all Americans; to act as guardians of the rule of law.

With respect,
