April 3, 2020

U.S. House of Representatives
U.S. Senate
Federal Energy Regulatory Commission
US Environmental Protection Agency
State Governors
State Attorneys General

To Decision Makers Across the U.S.,

As our nation's leading decisionmakers you are charged with protecting all the people of our nation, including the health, safety and rights of future generations. In order to fulfill this duty during the ongoing COVID-19 crisis, we call for a moratorium on the construction and approval of shale-gas pipeline projects and LNG export facilities.

A moratorium on Construction of Shale Gas Pipelines & Export Facilities is essential to protect against the spread of COVID-19, to ensure emergency and medical services are not further taxed or diverted to address avoidable harms, and to ensure the sacrifice being made by people and communities across our nation who are dutifully sheltering in place is not undermined, undone or replaced by new threats and harms.

State governments are asking all non-essential businesses to shut down and for people to shelter in place, yet construction of pipelines and LNG export facilities continue under government exemption -- to the danger and detriment of all.

A moratorium on pipeline construction is needed to protect public health, state resources and our environment.

Federal regulators are curtailing enforcement of construction mandates and environmental protection regulations, leaving it to states already struggling to address the ongoing pandemic to fill the void or expose their residents, communities and environment to irreparable harm.

- The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) and the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) announced relaxation of environmental rules and enforcement. State officials will be left to investigate and document violations and press for needed response when safety and environmental laws are violated. States are already restricting public and business activities to avoid overwhelming limited resources. Leaving oversight of industrial construction and operations to already overtaxed state governments puts communities at risk of additional harm.
- The Pipeline and Hazardous Materials Safety Administration (PHMSA) issued a stay on enforcement for pipeline and LNG facilities relaxing employee qualification standards, training mandates and drug testing. Further rule relaxation is anticipated. Removing oversight, training, drug checks, staffing and monitoring mandates will increase the likelihood of accidents and explosions, increasing the risk of catastrophic health, safety and environmental incidents putting communities in increased jeopardy and emergency resources further overwhelmed.

A moratorium on pipeline construction will prevent additional strains on our emergency and medical workers.

Numerous states, including Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Virginia, West Virginia and North Carolina, are quarantining residents while allowing pipeline construction to continue unabated. This encourages spread of COVID-19 and unnecessarily increases the workload of emergency and medical services:

- Pipeline construction workers are crossing state lines, raising the risk of COVID-19 community spread from one state and community to another. Communities are being forced to beg for state action to help protect them from cross-border virus spread.
- Workers who can't or won't adhere to requirements for social distancing on the work site raise the risk of coronavirus spread.

- Ongoing construction, even in the best of circumstances, increases the risk of accidents and explosions. On average there are over 100 natural gas pipeline accidents/incidents/explosions that inflict injury and death and cause over $1.2 million in yearly damages.

COVID-19 community spread and the heightened risk of harm from pipeline/LNG construction accidents are avoidable risks that can be prevented with a moratorium.

A moratorium on Approval of Shale Gas Pipelines & Export Facilities is essential to ensure the rights of impacted communities are protected, particularly communities of color and low income communities who already bear the brunt of environmental injustice, and to ensure industry and government is not misusing this pandemic to lock in our climate crisis.

A moratorium on approval of fracked-gas pipelines and LNG export facilities is essential to protect the rights of the public to meaningfully participate in our government.

The public participation process is being severely compromised by quarantine and shelter in place restrictions on communities. While the industry is being given countless exceptions, exemptions and extensions of deadlines and legal obligations, equivalent accommodations are not provided to the public and non-governmental organizations -- comment deadlines remain unchanged, and hearings are being canceled or replaced with inferior technological strategies.

Regardless of good intentions and genuine effort, on-line hearings about consequential government decisions -- such as approving fracked-gas pipelines and export facilities -- are no substitute for in-person and real-time access. Even in the best of times many residents lack access to web-based systems, whether computer or phone; libraries and schools that customarily fill this need are now closed; home computers must be shared by family members now that "distance learning" and online meetings are widespread for business, education and entertainment-- straining their availability and internet bandwidth. Too many impacted residents are ill or taking care of others.

Advancing approval of major infrastructure projects during a national emergency prevents a meaningful opportunity for public engagement promised them by law, puts undue pressure on people who are already struggling to meet their basic needs, and disenfranchises those who will be significantly harmed by the decisions made without their participation.

A moratorium on pipeline and LNG construction and approvals is essential for ensuring that the COVID crisis is not used to advance the climate crisis.

The COVID crisis is inflicting irreparable harm on people, families, communities and our economy. The costs of climate change to our country and the world will be even more brutal. And yet, many in government and industry are taking advantage of the COVID-19 pandemic to advance their business interests and to lock in the most devastating and polluting aspects of our climate crisis, posing an existential threat for future generations.

The WHO estimates that climate change is causing more than 150,000 deaths annually; a loss that will increase exponentially. Extreme weather and climate change threats to public health will cost the U.S. hundreds of billions of dollars every year, a cost that will soar to unprecedented levels. And climate change will help spread viruses like COVID-19, communicable diseases, parasites and bacteria by extending their breeding seasons and accelerating their geographical expansion. We cannot allow the COVID-19 pandemic to be misused to further lock in a fracked-gas future.

The COVID-19 Crisis has forced us to take drastic action. It is also critical that our response to the Climate Crisis be just as strong, powerful and effective and that includes ensuring that the ongoing pandemic does not undermine our climate change response opportunities or efforts. A moratorium on approval and construction of additional fracked gas infrastructure, a major source of climate changing emissions, is an essential step for both COVID-19 and Climate protection. Place a moratorium on construction and approval of shale-gas pipeline projects and LNG export facilities.
